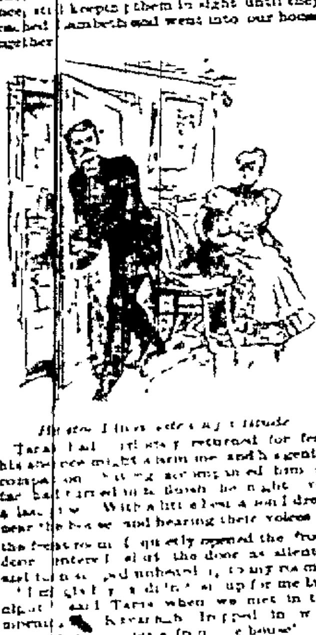
CHAPTER XVIII.

AN OLD ENEMY.

I made my way down to the embankment and hurried along on the less open side [illegible] in sight of Gordon and Taras strolling some distance in advance on the other side of the road. Then I relaxed my pace, still keeping them in sight until they reached Lambeth and went into our house together.



He was here [illegible] attitude.

Taras had [illegible] returned for fear his absence might alarm me, and his genial companion [illegible] him [illegible]. With a little effort I drew [illegible] near the house and hearing their voices in the front room I quietly opened the front door, entered [illegible] the door as silently and [illegible] to my room.

"[illegible] up for me last night [illegible] and Taras when we met in the morning. Kavanagh [illegible] the house [illegible] than I intended.

Kavanagh called in the course of the afternoon. He asked if Taras was at home, [illegible] After exchanging the [illegible] his finger [illegible] crossed the room and opened the door softly, but with such celerity that had Mere Lucas been eavesdropping he would certainly have discovered her. [illegible] closing the door [illegible] to his seat with a shrug and a look of [illegible] in his face.

"Nothing has happened?" he asked as he seated himself near me.

"[illegible]"

"[illegible]?" he asked sharply.

"[illegible] of irritation then [illegible] last night?"

I shook my head.

"[illegible] the same as she always is—just. If there had been any difference, I must have seen it."

"[illegible] did not go down stairs in the night, you think?"

"After Taras [illegible] open [illegible]. Nobody could pass my door without my knowing."

"Your [illegible] may have warned her. On the other hand"—He broke off and turning [illegible] and turning to me, [illegible]:

"I am afraid I must confess to having been [illegible]. I am still more afraid that I have done Mere Lucas a great injustice. You have a far better knowledge of her [illegible]"

[illegible] "I believe she's as good as [illegible]"

[illegible] on the subject to Taras.

"I never have [illegible] you."

[illegible] with respect to [illegible]

[illegible] "But how about that [illegible]?"

[illegible] I believe I was all at fault. [illegible] a conspiracy [illegible]

"Do you know a man named Mat[illegible]?"

"[illegible] I don't know him."

"He is one of the poor beggars who came [illegible] Taras. [illegible] The fact is, the [illegible] of [illegible] are a set of starving dogs, jealous of each other and ready to snap at any one who seems a little better off than the rest. It is natural that they should envy the old woman her comfortable position here, but it simply proves what a treacherous [illegible] they are when one man circulates such slanders as this. I fear I have made you very anxious. I hope you will forgive me. For the sake of Taras, whose life is so dear to us, and of such enormous importance to the welfare of his country, one cannot afford to turn a deaf ear to any hint at such a time as this, when real peril exists."

"That's all right. I feel just like that. Don't you mind telling me anything. I'd rather know it than not if it makes me ever so frightened. Besides it makes you feel so light hearted and happy to find it isn't true that you can't be vexed by what's past."

"You cannot have better philosophy or better feeling than that," said he, shaking my hand kindly as he rose.

The feeling of relief now that I had no longer any serious reason to regard Mere Lucas with mistrust or look for the development of some sinister design afforded me such happiness that I almost forgot the existence of danger, and when Taras about a week later told me that he should not return probably till 2 or 3 o'clock from the smoking concert to which he had been invited I bade him good night when he went out after dinner without any feeling of alarm.

That afternoon my dressmaker had sent to say that the dress she was making for me would be ready to try on in the evening. Nothing could have happened more opportunely, for I intended to take Taras by surprise with this beautiful velvet, and here was the very chance I needed of getting the important work of fitting done without his knowing anything about it.

The moment he was gone I ran to my room, dressed, and telling Mere Lucas where I was going—for she was in the [illegible]—I started off for Kennington road, where my dressmaker lived.

It was between 8 and 9. At that time Lambeth road is deserted. Heavy rain had fallen in the afternoon, and such sounds as there were seemed particularly clear. The rattle of a train over the railway bridge, a whistle from a tug on the river behind me, were noticeable by their distinctness, my own footsteps as I hurried along made quite a clatter on the wet pavement.

Struck by this fact, I presently fancied I could hear an echo to my footfall. Was it that of some one following? To satisfy the doubt I glanced back. Just within sight a man was following. There was nothing in that to call for particular attention, but when I had gone another hundred yards or so the echoing sound arrested my wandering thoughts and I glanced round again. The man's figure was there exactly at the same distance. It was odd that both should be walking in one direction at a precisely similar pace. For the next hundred yards I walked slower, but the following step came no nearer, and when I turned the man's figure appeared to be just as far off as before.

It was unpleasant even to fancy that my steps were dogged, and I turned the corner of Lambeth road sharp, with the determination to go on at a still quicker pace now that I was out of the man's sight, but the whistle of a tram suggested a still better means of avoiding annoyance, and I stopped with the determination to ride the remaining distance.

Just as I stepped into the car the man came running round the corner from the Lambeth road, and as I took my seat he sprang on to the footboard. As he passed the door to go up the steps the light from within fell on his face. There was no mistaking the yellow complexion, the sparse black beard and high cheek bones nor the sunk head and high shoulders.

It was Drigo.

CHAPTER XIX.

I got out of the [illegible] my dressmaker's. The car moved on [illegible] glancing after it I perceived the man [illegible] descending. He must have waited till he saw me step out on to the pavement, and I could only hope as I slipped into the house and hastily [illegible] that he had lost sight of me [illegible] from the car.

With the terrors of going home alone before me [illegible] I could invent no pretext [illegible].

[illegible] when we went to the door and [illegible] relief saw no one who asked [illegible] Drigo. I concluded that he had lost sight of me or gone off on a wrong scent.

[illegible] "May I lend you an umbrella?" said the dressmaker.

"No, I think I will wait for a tram," said I, "that will take me home to my door."

And when the car came in sight I bade her "good night" and ran down to stop it. As I stepped in my heart quaked, for I saw the man I dreaded come out from the shadow of the wall, and before I had [illegible] I heard his foot grate on the steps outside.

It was a Westminster car—not as I had hoped one that would take me to Lambeth. To avoid the terrible stretch of deserted street I went on as far as Hercules buildings. That gave me a little start, for until he saw me get out my pursuer could not tell which turning I should take. Glancing up, I saw Drigo's hideous face peering over the railing to discover who was alighting, and the moment he recognized me he began to scuttle down the steps.

I ran without stopping till I reached the tavern at the Lambeth road end of the buildings, thinking in my weakness that I would seek protection if he was on my heels rather than venture alone on that last strip of deserted road. I had made up my mind now that the enemy of Taras had resolved to put me out of the way as a preliminary to attacking him, and had given the job to this villain. [illegible]

[illegible] from Mere Lucas [illegible]. Drigo [illegible] to escape in [illegible] had his designs been directed against me. His spirit of revenge would not have rested content with giving me a scare. [illegible] of this opportunity to injure me it was scarcely credible that he would make any [illegible] direction.

Probably [illegible] to the window [illegible] that I [illegible] and am not likely to go out again to night.

But looking out under the window blind I [illegible] him standing on the embankment [illegible] nearly opposite the house. What did that mean? A solution of the mystery began to dawn upon me as soon as I perceived that the man had been posted there to watch my movements, and quickly took the definite form of conviction. An attack was to be made not on me, as I had foolishly imagined in my fright, but upon Taras. He was to be waylaid on his return by the gang, who had detached Drigo to prevent me communicating any suspicion of their design to him. But a week before I had watched outside Grandison chambers and followed Taras home. That fact might very well be known to the secret enemy who seemed to be acquainted with every movement of Taras, and clearly explained the object in setting [illegible] outpost to watch me. As I recalled the incident the figure of the man who drove Kavanagh's brougham came before my mind, and I saw again the furtive glance of suspicion with which he regarded me. Might he not be a spy obtaining information by some covert means from Kavanagh?

Mere Lucas came to the door and bade me good night. When she was gone, I went to the window and peeped again behind the blind. Drigo had not stirred from his place at the foot of the bridge. His presence served to confirm my suspicions, and I saw that Taras, to be saved, must be warned of the danger. But how was I to reach him? I saw clearly enough that it would not do to expose myself to a personal encounter with Drigo. That would not save Taras. Yet how could I get to Taras without that risk?

In seeking an answer to this question it presently occurred to me that workmen had been doing something to the wall which separated the yard from Gordon's pottery, and I recollected hearing that an opening was to be made to facilitate the transport of the group to the kiln, where it was to be burned. If I could get into the pottery I might find an exit in the street at the back and so get away unseen and unsuspected by Drigo.

Leaving the light burning in my room, I ran down to the kitchen, provided myself with a candle and silently went out into the yard. A heap of bricks and rubbish showed where the men had been working, and on lighting the candle I found to my inexpressible joy that a break had been made in the wall and roughly closed for the night with a couple of boards. I pushed one aside and found that I could easily get into the cellar beyond, where I saw the square blocks of clay piled up from floor to ceiling.

With some little difficulty I made my way through the cellar into the warehouse and thence through an office into the shop, and here I thought I had nothing to do but unbolt the door and walk out. But when I came to examine the fastenings I discovered a fact which I might have foreseen, knowing that no one inhabited the pottery—the door was locked on the outside. My heart fell, and I stood looking at the solid lock, stupidly for some moments, quite overcome by the hopelessness of my position. In the silence that followed my ear caught the sound of a distant footstep and then the heavy scrape of a nailed boot on a ladder and the rustle of straw on the warehouse floor. With unreasoning terror I figured Drigo pursuing me hither, and my heart stood still with the consciousness that I was utterly at his mercy.

A glimmer of light appeared. It grew stronger and then a part of rough corduroys appeared at the head of the steps with a lantern on one side and a crowbar on the other, but the next minute I breathed again as a man came into sight whom I recognized as a hand employed in the pottery. He could say nothing for astonishment on finding me there, nor was his amazement lessened when I made him understand that I wanted to leave the pottery without going back through the yard.

"Well, miss," said he, "there's only one way you can go out if so be you don't want to go back the way you come, and that's the way I come in when I've got my fires to look after, as the case is tonight. It's a longer way round and a sight dirtier, for you'll have to go through the coalyard and out into Ferry street, where the road's all up for the drains."

The eagerness with which I agreed to take this roundabout and unpleasant route must have led him to doubt whether on the whole I was quite in my right mind, and indeed my exultation and joy were little short of madness when I got out into Ferry street, where I knew I was quite safe from Drigo.

CHAPTER XX.

A PURSUIT AND RESCUE.

A simple scheme of action suggested itself to my mind as I hurried along the back streets, and coming into Kennington road I looked about for a cab. A smart new hansom stood by the curb in the light of a public house, and as I stopped, wondering if it were disengaged, the driver jumped out and said briskly, "Cab, miss?"

He was as smart as his cab and looked more like a gentleman's servant than an ordinary cabman. I liked the look of him.

"Are you disengaged for a good long while—perhaps four or five hours?" I asked.

"Where do you want to go, miss?"

"Burlington street. You will have to wait there for a gentleman, and he may not come out of his club before 3 o'clock."

"All right, miss. If it ain't running along all the time I don't mind how long I'm on in a manner of speaking."

"If you do what I tell you I'll pay you just what you ask. Can you put out that light inside?"

"Certainly, miss."

He seemed to understand my position to a nicety as I asked which end of Burlington street he was to drive to.

"The Pantheon club," said I. "Draw up, if you please, so that I can see any one who comes out."

He carried out this instruction admirably, placing his cab where I commanded a perfect view of the steps leading to the club door and leaving just sufficient space for other cabs that came and went to pull up easily in front. A good many visitors went into the Pantheon. I saw them distinctly as they walked up the steps in the light that came through the open door, but a long time passed before I distinguished any face that was known to me. It must have been after 12 o'clock when Kavanagh's brougham pulled up in front of us. No one got out of it, but I identified the driver at once as the man whom I had seen waiting outside Grandison chambers, and I fancied as he slowly got down from the box that he cast the same suspicious glance at the hansom that he had cast at me that night.

The drifting rain had bedewed the window in front of me, completely obscuring the glass except at the extreme edge, where a projection of the cab sheltered it. Through this narrow space I watched the man with eager excitement. Stamping his feet as if for warmth, he began to walk up and down the pavement, and I noticed that every turn he came a little nearer my hansom, casting his ferrety eyes at the window as if to pierce the obscurity. This maneuver did not escape the observation of my smart driver.

"How long are they going to keep us here, mate?" he asked when the man had stamped almost within touch of the cab.

"I don't know. How long have you been waiting here?"

As he spoke he approached so near that I thought it advisable to crouch down below the level of the window.

"Oh, long enough to wish I hadn't got the job. What's on?"

"A concert or something."

"Then we may make up our minds for another hour or more of it. They don't turn 'em out of these clubs before 2. Got a light?"

A match was struck, and a few more remarks were exchanged, and then the stamping of feet fading away, I ventured to raise my head just as the man was stepping up to his seat on the brougham. His curiosity was satisfied.

The time dragged painfully as I waited in feverish suspense for some fresh development of the drama which I felt was being played close at hand. Visitors came out in twos and threes—cabs were called—there must have been a string of them behind us—the street was quite animated for a time, then there was a strange pause, and the next men who came out stood on the steps looking in as if something unusual was taking place there.

Suddenly one ran down and opened the brougham door. Fearful anticipations of some impending calamity agitated me to such a degree that every object danced and quivered before my eyes. But I made out a group of men slowly descending the steps, as if they were supporting some great weight, and I distinguished among them Kavanagh's light overcoat.

"What is it?" I forced myself to call through the tube.

"Only a gentleman in liquor, miss," replied the cabman in a jocose tone.

Reckless of the consequences, I pushed open the window that I might see more clearly. At that moment Kavanagh was stepping into the brougham, and the next I saw the helpless man lifted in after him. The light fell upon his face as it drooped backward. It was Taras!

"Follow that carriage wherever it goes. Keep close to it," I cried, recovering my senses under the same influence that had paralyzed them.

"Right you are, miss," replied my driver, gathering up his reins, and as the brougham turned into Regent street we fell into the string of vehicles close behind it.

What was to be done now? I saw no other course but to follow the brougham to Lambeth and hold myself in readiness to act with rigor and discretion in whatever contingency arose. It was not until we had gone a considerable distance that I began to doubt whether it was Kavanagh's intention to go to Lambeth. Fixing my eyes on the brougham I had taken no notice of the streets through which we passed. When the length of time that had elapsed since leaving Burlington street aroused a suspicion in my mind, I found that the houses on either side of the way were quite unfamiliar to me.

"Where are we?" I asked through the tube.

And when the man answered, "Cannon street, miss," I was no wiser than before.

But soon after this we came into an open space, where I recognized the dark outline of the Tower. Then I knew where we were and saw with horror that we were approaching the place where Taras before had fallen into the hands of his enemy. If they got him in the Mariner's Joy again, how could I save him?

I had noticed, with growing anxiety, that the brougham had greatly increased the distance between us after leaving the more crowded thoroughfares, a fact that I had attributed to the greater strength of Kavanagh's horse and not to the particular artfulness of my driver. This loss of ground now added to my terror. In the labyrinth of streets beyond the mint we might lose sight of the brougham and never overtake it.

"Can you go no faster?" I called.

"I [illegible] should think so! I thought you just wanted to keep the parties in sight without sorter lettin 'em tumble to it."

"No—no! Go on quick—quick!"

A flick of the whip doubled our pace. The wheels were tired with rubber, but as the clatter of hoofs grew more audible to the driver of the brougham he turned and looked back. We were near enough then for me to distinguish his hollow cheeks and cavernous eyes, and I think he must have recognized me, for he used the whip freely and increased his speed. Turning the angle by St. Katherine's docks, I saw Kavanagh thrust his head from the window and look back. For a time the race seemed equal, but I observed that the brougham did not gain on us, though the driver used the whip far more freely than my man. But the terror of Shadwell was still before me.

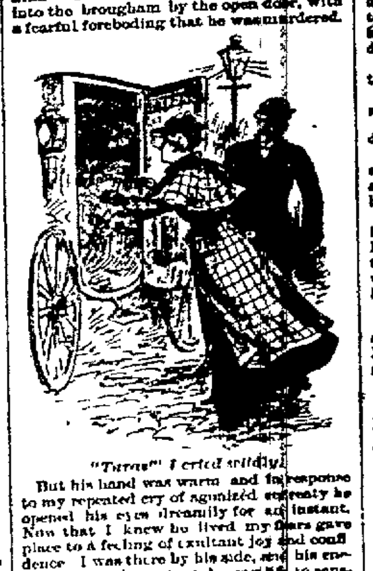
I called to the driver.

"Could you get in front of the carriage and stop it?"

He said he would "have a try at it, anyhow," and with another cut of the whip he shot on and ran wheel to wheel with the brougham. I stood up, and craning out caught sight of Kavanagh as we passed the open window looking across the recumbent body of Taras, his face livid in the light of our lamp. In another minute we had passed, and pulling in sharp toward the pavement forced the driver of the brougham to draw up. Then by another rapid movement my man turned the hansom so as to completely bar the road, and both vehicles came to a dead standstill.

"What do you want?" asked Kavanagh, meeting me in the road as I sprang out of the hansom.

"Taras!" I cried wildly, brushing past him. "Taras!" I cried again as I stepped into the brougham by the open door, with a fearful foreboding that he was murdered.



"Taras!" I cried wildly.

But his hand was warm and in response to my repeated cry of agonized entreaty he opened his eyes dreamily for an instant. Now that I knew he lived my fears gave place to a feeling of exultant joy and confidence. I was there by his side, and his enemies would have to take my life to separate us, and with this delicious assurance I felt almost indifferent as to what might follow. Presently, however, as this ecstasy subsided, I began to take notice of what was passing outside.

Kavanagh was explaining the affair to a policeman, who had seen the finish of the strange race from the gates of the London docks. I could not catch what he said, but his tone was offhand and conclusive.

"You wasn't no more asleep than what I am," broke in my driver from the top of the hansom, and his words were strikingly sharp and clear after the low murmur of Kavanagh. "You put your head out of the window before we reached the mint, and you must have seen well enough as you weren't going to Lambeth that way. You spoke to your man then, and instead of turning round to go back he did all he could to get away in the other direction. You'll just take my number, if you please, constable," he added, swinging himself down from his seat. "The gent in there has been hocused, I'll take my oath. And there's a whole gang of 'em in the job—the driver there, this party that plays the swell and a couple more of 'em in Burlington street. We've been watching the whole plant for four or five hours—ask the young lady inside—and don't you be had by no kid about falling asleep and driver making a mistake. I shall give my evidence if anything goes wrong, mind."

"All right, cabby, all right. I know my duty as well as you do," returned the policeman, and coming to the door of the brougham he asked if I had any charge to make against Kavanagh.

At the same moment Kavanagh appeared at the other window, and speaking rapidly in French said:

"Be careful, as you value your friend's life. I warn you that if you make any charge against me, or even mention my name, Taras will be a dead man within a week. I have only one wish, and that is to get Taras home safely to Lambeth. You shall have every assurance you require that I am acting in perfect good faith." Then he added in English, that the policeman and the cabman, who had come to his side, might hear: "Stay with your friend. My man shall drive you home to Lambeth. I will take the seat outside. You can rely upon the protection of this cabman. He shall follow, and if we diverge one step from the direct road to Lambeth bridge stop us as he has stopped us already, and you can then give me in custody on the charge of conspiracy and abduction. Once more," he added, speaking again in French and with impressive earnestness, "I warn you that this is the only means by which you can save Taras from certain death!"

Fearing the confirmation of this warning even more than a fresh act of treachery, I consented to this proposal, my friend the cabman promising that he would not "give 'im half a chance" of playing false.

CHAPTER XXI.

KAVANAGH CONFESSES.

The movement of the brougham at starting aroused Taras from his lethargy, and he made an effort to shake off sleep, but with a long drawn sigh his head drooped again the next minute. I drew him toward me and with his dear face pillowed on my shoulder I could scarcely wish our journey to end.

When we drew up at length at our house in Lambeth, Kavanagh came to the door, took the latchkey from Taras' pocket and after lighting the candles in our living room came back to me.

"We must lay our friend on the couch in the sitting room," he said, and turning to the cabman, who had stationed himself in front of us in evidence of his continued vigilance, continued, "Can you give me a hand here? There's a man to hold your horse's head."

With no pretense at disguise, he called Drigo by name, and the man came from the foot of the bridge where I had last seen him and silently placed himself in front of the horse at Kavanagh's bidding.

"He will not waken before midday," said Kavanagh in French when Taras was comfortably disposed on the couch. "The sleeping draft I gave him is perfectly harmless. You can see that he is not in the least pain, poor old chap!"

The tone of affection in which he spoke was not less astonishing than the openness of his confession. The audacity of his hypocrisy astounded me, and yet as I looked at him bending over Taras with those soft, feminine eyes I could find nothing in the expression of his face to belie his sentiment.

"I must speak to you before I go," he continued, raising his head and looking me calmly in the face. "The cabman shall wait outside till I go, or in the room with us if you prefer it."

"I'm not afraid of you," I replied.

He bowed, and going to the outer door told the cabman to back his cab and wait there where he could hear if he were called. Then he told the driver of his brougham to return to the mews and bade Drigo go with him. These orders I heard distinctly as I sat on the stool beside the couch where Taras lay.

Kavanagh returned to the room, leaving the doors open, and seating himself on the couch by Taras' feet he leaned forward and said gravely:

"This is the second time you have defeated my plans for saving the life of our friend. Yet I took every precaution that a man could take, short of confiding my purpose to you this second time."

"And if you had done that do you think I should have helped you?" I asked fiercely.

"Yes, I believe you would. I set a man to watch you, and thought that enough"—

"And so it would have been if I hadn't found means to get away without his seeing me," I said triumphantly.

"Whether I overrated his ability or underrated yours matters little now," said he with a shrug, after regarding me in silence for a minute. "I ought to have told you all. With your help we must have succeeded"—

"In what?"

"In getting Taras safely away. At this moment he might have been on the steamer waiting for him on the river and on his way to Russia."

I could only look at him in speechless astonishment for a time. Then, doubting whether I had rightly caught the sense of his words, I said:

"You think I would have consented to such a thing as that?"

"Yes, if I had shown you that it was the only way of saving his life. Understand this, the czar has said that Taras must be silenced—that means that he must be taken back to Russia, where he will be prevented from publishing works offensive to the czar, or that he will be secretly assassinated, for it is hopeless to think of restraining him while he lives here in freedom. I have done my utmost in that direction. I made it impossible for him to burn the group of statuary until Gordon undertook to build a kiln for that purpose, and it was I who destroyed the group the day before it was to be cast. You know now that it was the hand of a friend, and not an enemy, who did that."

"You call yourself a friend, who did that!" I exclaimed.

"Yes, and you would do the same if you perfectly realized his position."

"Destroy what he has made—the work so dear to him? Never!"

"Would you rather that he himself should be destroyed?" He paused for an answer, but as I found no reply to make he continued:

"Unfortunately, nothing is to be gained by it, or it should be beaten down again. He has said that he will carry the work through, though he have to stand by it with a revolver by his side from first to last."

"And he will!" I cried.

"I was as fully convinced on that point as you are before I abandoned the idea. No, there is no other alternative. He must go back to Russia."

"He would rather die."

"But we would rather that he lived. And surely if the means of preserving him were offered you—if another opportunity of removing him should occur"—

"I will not listen to you," I cried with indignation as I started to my feet. "Nothing in the world could persuade me to join you in this shameful plot."

"For heaven's sake, be reasonable, my poor girl!" said he in a soothing tone. "You have seen those pictures of prison life and fancy that Taras would be exposed to such cruelty and hardships as are represented in them. You are altogether mistaken, as he himself would tell you if you asked him. His rank alone secures him against ill treatment. The czar is not unmerciful. Imperial interests compel him to take strong measures. His hostility toward Taras is tempered with profound respect for a political adversary of high attainments and unimpeachable honesty. In Russia Taras will be treated with the utmost consideration and kindness. He will be allowed to live where he likes, and the only restriction put upon his liberty will be with regard to the propagation of revolutionary ideas, and this restriction will be but temporary. The country is ripe for revolution, and in a short time the present government will be overthrown, and then Taras will be free. On the other hand, if he is not conveyed to Russia, his fate is death. Can you hesitate in choosing which lot shall be his?"

"It isn't for me to choose, nor for you. Tell Taras what you have told me and let him decide. He is not a fool or a child that we should take his guidance in our hands."

"He is a child in some things—in simplicity and recklessness. Suppose he chooses to face the danger of assassination, as probably he will?"

"What then? You will not find him unprepared nor me either."

"It is not with me that you will have to deal next time, but with one whose purpose is unbiased by friendship."

"Friendship!" I said through my clenched teeth, feeling that I should strike the man for the blasphemous use of a word so sacred to my heart. "How dare you speak of friendship? Do you think I am an idiot to be fooled by a lie? What proof of friendship have you given—you, who have done your utmost to injure the man who trusted you?"

"Not my utmost. Another pinch of powder in his glass, and Taras would never have awoke again."

"If you did not kill him," I said, detecting, as I thought, an expression of cowardice in those soft eyes, "it was because you dared not."

His silence confirmed my suspicion, and I continued hotly:

"One thing is certain—you dare not try to do it now."

"No," he replied quietly, "I dare not even try to save him again, I fear."

Then he rose and walked across the room, seeing the hopelessness of persuading me and the increasing hostility his words provoked.

"What shall you do when Taras wakes?" he asked as he turned and came back toward me.

"Tell him everything—all that has happened, all you have said."

He nodded, as if this were no more than he expected, and took another turn across the room in silent meditation. As he seated himself again in front of me he said:

"We should be friends, having one object in common. The hope that animates us both is only to be realized by joining forces and acting in concert. You doubt my integrity—truth—sincerity. I will try to prove it by a confession which places me at your mercy. I put my life in your hands. At a word you can destroy me as surely as the czar can destroy Taras. A stronger proof of sincerity no man could give, and all I ask in return is that you will hear me patiently and judge me without prejudice."

"I'll hear what you have to say at any rate," said I.

He stepped to the door noiselessly, looked out into the passage, and coming back seated himself still nearer to me, that he might drop his voice to a tone which could not be heard outside.

"I am a nihilist," he began, "a member of the same secret body to which Taras belongs. In the service of this society I obtained a post in the ministerial bureau at St. Petersburg, where every movement of the secret police came under my observation. By these means I was enabled to warn my society of any action about to be taken against suspected members. You understand me?"

"Yes; you were a kind of spy on the police."

"I was a spy, and I risked my life in this service. At any moment I might have been discovered and hanged for my zeal. While I was in this office the order came from the czar to silence Taras. Taras was then, as he is now, my dearest friend, and you can imagine my horror when I heard that this order was to be executed without delay. Happily the minister found it difficult to lay his hand on a man for his purpose. It was a very delicate business. As Taras was in London it was necessary that the agent should speak English, not only for the practical working out of the design, but to avoid political complications. It would never do for the Russian government to be discovered in this plot to violate the freedom of a man so well known and much honored as Taras. There was one man in the service of the police who eagerly desired to have the job, and that was Rudendorf, an avowed enemy of Taras. The chief objection to employing him was that he did not understand a word of English.

"One morning the minister, after explaining this difficulty and the objection to Rudendorf, asked me bluntly if I would undertake to silence Taras. 'I don't ask you to kill him,' he said, seeing some sign of repugnance in my face probably. 'One [illegible] for not employing Rudendorf is that he certainly would do so. I simply want you to bring Taras back to Russia. That will please the czar far more than the death of a man for whom he still entertains a [illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible] means of [illegible]. I [illegible] you but 24 hours to [illegible] but if you will not do [illegible] doomed man.' "And now," said [illegible] pointedly, "what answer would you have given in my place?"

"I would have accepted," said I without hesitation.

"I am sure you would. [illegible] an undertaking to accept [illegible] must see as clearly as I [illegible] to fulfill my promise."

"No, I don't see that. [illegible] the minister [illegible] other. You must have [illegible] very fast, and one more [illegible] great difference to you."

"Lying in this case would have been worse than useless. The lie would [illegible] out as soon as it was seen [illegible] effort to silence Taras. [illegible] prompt Rudendorf to watch me, and [illegible] would be the first to denounce me to the ministry. The result is certain. [illegible] dorf would have been charged with [illegible] tion be averted. The lie would [illegible] delayed the execution of the sentence [illegible] namely as long as I delayed it by [illegible] sure which I have already confessed to. Do you follow me?"

"Yes."

"You see that if I had refused [illegible] should certainly have [illegible] murder of Taras by his enemy, Rudendorf?"

"Yes."

"And you see that for the same reason I am compelled now to keep the promise I made."

Logical as the proposition was, I could not agree to it.

"As the only means of saving this friend from assassination by Rudendorf," he [illegible] sisted, laying his hand lightly upon [illegible].

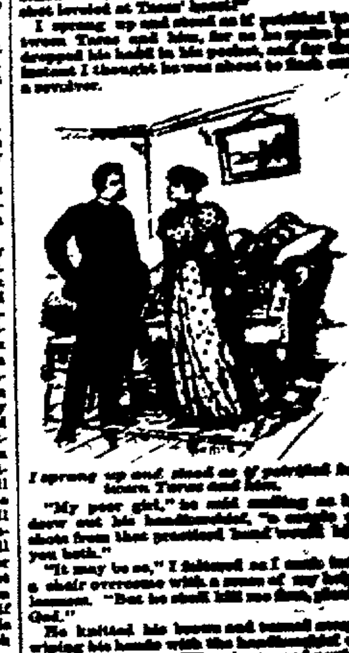
"I understand what you mean," said I in a reluctant tone.

"Then you must agree with me upon the course to be taken."

"No," said I, with reviving energy, "I will never agree to that. I have saved him before single handed against four or five of you."

"The third time you will have to fight Rudendorf—not me. If he stood where I stand now, how would you ward off the shot leveled at Taras' breast?"

I sprang up and stood as if petrified between Taras and him, for as he spoke he dropped his hand in his pocket, and for the instant I thought he was about to flash out a revolver.



I sprang up and stood as if petrified between Taras and him.

"My poor girl," he said, smiling as he drew out his handkerchief, "a couple of shots from that practiced hand would kill you both."

"It may be so," I faltered as I sank into a chair overcome with a sense of my helplessness. "But he shall kill me first, please God."

He knitted his brows and turned away, wiping his hands with the handkerchief as if they were wet. When he turned again, there was perspiration on his brow.

"You talk of death," he said, "as if there was no chance of escape, no hope of happiness in all the years before you."

"There is no chance of escape if what you say is true; no hope of happiness if Taras is taken from me. It's useless to go on talking. Do you think I'll give in at the first sight of danger? Not I. You get to think how I'm to face this other man now."

"Some way of getting out of the difficulty," he repeated in a slow, reflective tone, and then he added eagerly, "Who knows but that your woman's wit might find an outlet where my senses are at fault? Why should not we—you and I—try to devise some scheme by which we may outwit the police, Rudendorf, the whole lot?"

I regarded him with mistrust, his earnestness, some crafty expression in his half closed eyes, quickening my suspicions, though these signs were not [illegible] with an ardent wish to save Taras by deceiving his enemies.

"We will see what Taras says."

"Great heaven!" he exclaimed, with extreme agitation. "Taras must never hear a word of what has happened tonight. If you will not promise me that upon your oath, I—I"——

A look of dismay—a quick outward movement with his trembling hands, as if he were abandoning everything—closed the sentence which his lips seemed powerless to finish.

"If I am to believe you," I said after a minute's reflection, "Taras will believe you, and if what you have told me is not a lie he will forgive you."

"I do not doubt that. His faith is greater than yours. But it is his duty to report this to the society, and because it is a duty he will do it, despite the mercy in his heart. The society will judge me by the letter of the law, and my sentence will be death. This is what I expose myself to by the attempt to save Taras from the hand of Rudendorf. This is the fate to which you condemn me the moment you betray the secret I have given you. You are bound to respect that."

"A secret! I have promised nothing. I did not ask you to confess, and nothing binds me to conceal your explanation."

"You forced me to explain—to confess everything—to rely upon your feeling for Taras, if not on your mercy, for a man whose judgment has been betrayed by an excess of affection—the moment you stopped me, and there was question of your charging me with an indictable offense. The merest rumor would suffice to draw down the vengeance of the society upon me. You must promise to keep my secret."

"If I cannot promise"——

"Then I must leave the country before you can betray me. My life will not be safe here for another day. You force me to abandon Taras, and you take upon yourself all responsibility for what befalls him after. This is what will follow. When the police at St. Petersburg discover what has happened—and the telegraph will take the news within a few hours of my flight—Rudendorf will be dispatched to fill my place, and all the precautions you may take will fail to ward off the blow which his relentless hand will surely deliver. Within a week—aye, less than that—Taras will be a dead man, and you will have the answer to God for his death."

It was I now who trembled.

Seeing the deep impression he had made, Kavanagh proceeded quickly:

"I ask you for nothing that you cannot safely give. I throw aside the hope of inducing you to help me in getting Taras away from London. I merely ask you to be silent for awhile—to hold my secret until I have devised some new plan for defeating Rudendorf and the police. What can you desire? If human ingenuity [illegible] by the fear of death, can [illegible] means of saving Taras, he shall be saved. Wanton wickedness or madness [illegible] lead you to refuse such an offer. [illegible] a guarantee of good faith on my part, [illegible] you have reason to believe that I [illegible] ing falsely, you can at once [illegible] charge against me and bring [illegible] to support it, punishing my [illegible] death. I will not even ask you [illegible] for an indefinite time. Give me [illegible]—a few days—to think out a scheme [illegible] return I swear to deliver [illegible] the hands of Rudendorf."

Get the vote out.

THIS is a Republican year, surely.

THE "change" throughout the county next Tuesday will be a corker

IF the Republicans get their vote out on Tuesday next they will rejoice in a glorious victory before 12 o'clock that night.

THE Republicans have a large plurality in this county and a sweeping victory will be theirs on Tuesday next if they vote.

THE comrades of the late war must not forget that the Democratic County Convention endorsed Hoke Smith's course on the pension question.

A STUPID canard of some kind is to be circulated around the county on Monday next. We urge Republicans to be on the lookout for it. It will be a lie, of course, and should be stamped as such

A. D. STEPHENS, of State Line Mills, is another of the victims of Hoke Smith's revenge. His pension has been suspended and as long as a Democratic Administration is in power in this country it will not be restored to him.

IT is important that every Republican understands how to vote. He will vote right by making a cross in the circle over the Republican ticket. It is only necessary to make the one cross to vote a straight ticket. If he desires in voting for a candidate on the Democratic ticket then he must put a cross in the square after each name he desires to vote for.

OUR down town contemporary is very much distressed at our "blunder" in referring to the Republican candidates for Commissioners as heavier taxpayers than the Democratic. In reply we have only to say that Mr. Jewett, one of the Republican candidates for Commissioner, pays more taxes in one year than both the Democratic candidates pay in three years. Last year Mr. Jewett paid over $300 in taxes.

THE campaign is at an end and it is gratifying to be able to state that so far as the candidates are concerned misrepresentation and mud-slinging has not been indulged in. Both tickets are made up of gentlemen who would scorn to engage in vilification of their opponents. There have been contemptible lies circulating around within the past few days as to the appointments which would be made by some of the Republican candidates in case of their election, but we are satisfied these originated with the indiscreet friends of the opposing candidates and not with them. The Commissioners and the Prothonotary have a number of appointments within their jurisdiction, but we declare most emphatically, and we know whereof we speak, that not a single pledge of that character has been made by a Republican candidate. We don't pretend to speak for the Democratic candidates, but we are authorized to make this broad denial for the Republican candidates. Every trick and artifice will be used to swerve Republicans from their duty to their party ticket and the principles it represents, but they are too intelligent to be deceived by last hour canards, and the men who are circulating them will discover that fact when the votes are counted.

whose ability to occupy the office they seek is beyond question, and men who steadfastly and staunchly believe in the same principles that you believe in. The Republican party believes in the principles which gave this nation thirty years of great prosperity, during which time the American people made a greater advance in wealth, in diversification of industry and in approximation to complete self dependence than they made during the preceding seventy years. It opened new markets for our products and prosperity smiled on us, when in November last the Democratic party won a victory. The result was the inevitable. Their principles had been endorsed but they were the wrong principles, and they shut the doors of hundreds of mills, filled the streets with idle men, and plunged our nation from the top notch of prosperity to the depths of commercial depression.

The Republican party at its convention in Smethport this year nominated a ticket which they earnestly believe has all the qualifications for commanding the respect and suffrage of those who regard the principles of the party to be right. It is not necessary to make particular reference to these candidates at this time. We have referred to them at different times during this campaign, and a better character of men have never been presented to the people of McKean county for their suffrages. They are entitled to and should receive the vote of every Republican in the county.

There is only one danger in not carrying the county for every man on our ticket and that is in a failure to get the Republican vote to the polls. If we do not do our duty in that direction we will regret it on the evening of the election.

COMRADE BARTLE'S PENSION TAKEN FROM HIM.

A communication was received from Port Allegany this week which shows the underhanded manner in which the present Pension Department, under the control of Hoke Smith, is conducting its affairs. It is only one of the thousands of cases that are reported from all States in the North, and being in our own county, vouched for by one of the best men in our neighboring borough and striking down such an old veteran and honored citizen as Mr. B. G. Bartle, we not only deem the facts worthy of publication, but believe it our duty to report such cases that our readers may know how those who saved our government are being insulted and inconvenienced by the present administration. The writer says

"Mr. Bartle received a notice from the Pension Department stating his pension had been suspended, awaiting further proof, and that if further proof was not forthcoming in sixty days he would be dropped from the list, under the disability clause of the act of 1890. The truth is he drew his pension under the old act and his papers are on file in the Department fully proving that his disability dates back to time of service. I am confident that a majority of the Democrats here would subscribe to the fact that they have known Mr. Bartle for a long period and further know him to be physically unable to do hard, manual labor. The case has raised the ire of all the Republicans and many Democrats here and I think it will have a good effect in making Republicans stick to their ticket."

The closing sentence of our correspondent's letter hits the key note. How can any Republican vote for a candidate who was nominated at the late Democratic County Convention which endorsed just such actions, of Hoke Smith, in their resolutions!

CAPT. CHAPMAN, of Bradford, is one of those kind of Republicans who takes no stock in sham, false pretence or any species of fraud. Some one, writing under the nom de plume of "Non Partisan," had a communication in last Monday's Era in which Mr. Gorton, the Republican candidate for District Attorney, was represented as not the equal, in point of legal ability, of Mr. Bouton, the Democratic candidate. Capt. Chapman, one of our ablest lawyers, takes exceptions, very properly, to this effort to belittle Mr Gorton. In his reply in Tuesday's Era to this "Non Partisan" Democrat he says: "I have no hesitancy in saying that after 15 years personal acquaintance with Mr. Gorton as a practicing attorney, citizen, and a Republican, that he stands equal to any man in this county, and is entitled to the confidence and support at least of the members of the party to which he belongs, and at whose hands he holds the nomination, and which was thrust upon him by a convention unsought. I apprehend that no gentleman who has any regard for the truth could be induced publicly to say that Mr. Gorton is not the equal of Mr. Bouton as a man, a citizen and attorney, and in every way qualified to fill the office for which he is a candidate."

MR. FRANK R. FOSTER, Republican candidate for County Commissioner, is proprietor of the Central Pharmacy of this place and desires to inform his friends through the columns of the MINER that owing to the illness of his clerk and his inability to secure the services of another, he was compelled to stop his canvass and attend to the duties of his store. There are many of his friends in different localities of the county whom he has not seen since his nomination and whom he expected to visit this and the past week, but through an unforeseen circumstance he was prevented from so doing. He hopes that any of his friends whom he has been unable to see will accept this explanation of the matter which was no fault of his.

After trying many remedies for catarrh during past twelve years, I tried Ely's Cream Balm with complete success. It is over one year since I stopped using it and haven't had return of catarrh. I recommend it to all my friends.—Milton T. Palm, Reinholds, Pa.

A. B. WALKER.

The gentleman who heads the ticket was born in Butler county, Pennsylvania, in 1847. He was educated at the high schools of his native place, and at the age of 20 years began life for himself. He entered the oil business and worked his way up from driller and contractor to the owner of wells. He came to this county in 1875 and was one of the firm who drilled the well on the Kennedy lot that gave the great northern oil field its start. In all his undertakings he has shown that degree of push and perseverance which makes men valuable wherever they are placed. He has always been a Republican and the party is proud of him as its candidate for Sheriff, knowing that he has the ability and integrity to conduct the affairs of that office with justice and impartiality.

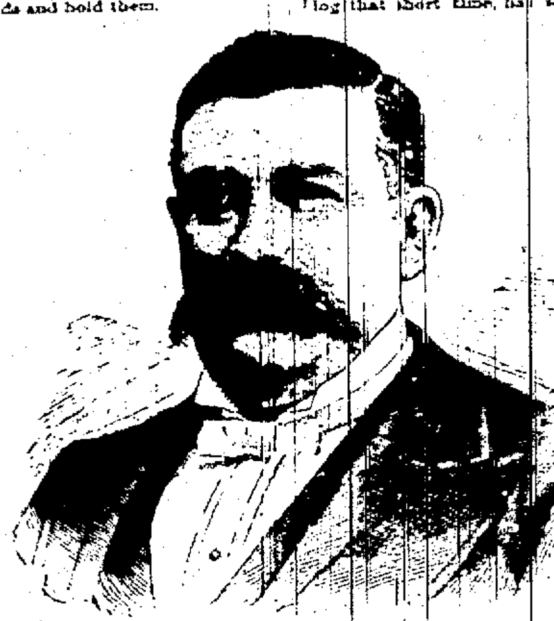
GEORGE W. MITCHELL, who asks the support of his party for Prothonotary at the polls, was born in Chautauqua county, N. Y., in 1856. He came with his parents to McKean county in 1875 and began his business career as a member of the mercantile firm of H. G. Mitchell & Sons at Kendall Creek where he has since resided. The firm was afterwards changed to Mitchell Brothers and later to G. W. Mitchell. He was at one time interested in the producing of oil, and in all his busy life has exhibited a marked ability for successfully conducting affairs and paying strict attention to whatever business was entrusted to him. The office of Prothonotary is one of the most important in the county and requires a man who is painstaking and obliging, as well as one who has the natural capacity for transacting business and overseeing affairs in the office. Such a man is G. W. Mitchell, and it is safe to say that the vast quantity of public records and papers, and the wants of the people, will be carefully looked after, especially when entrusted to one who has had "Carefulness and Thoroughness" as a motto throughout his successful business career. Mr. Mitchell has always been an ardent Republican and will receive the hearty support of his party. He served 9 years as school director in his town, and is one of those active, genial men who make friends and hold them.



SHERIDAN GORTON.

In the person of Sheridan Gorton, the Republican nominee for District Attorney, we have an instance, rarely seen in the politics of this country at this day, of the office seeking the man and not the man the office, as Mr. Gorton received the unanimous vote of the delegates in the Republican County Convention, unsolicited and without even the knowledge that his name would be presented to the convention until noon of the day it was held. Under these circumstances he should receive the support of not only every Republican in McKean county, but of all those, irrespective of party, who believe that society would be better and politics purer were the office to seek the man.

There can be and there is no question as to his legal ability, professional integrity and general fitness for the office. His reputation as a lawyer is too well known to require comment, having practised his profession in this county for over sixteen years.

As a citizen of Smethport borough, where he has resided since 1877, he has always been one of the foremost men in every enterprise calculated to advance the interests of the borough or the welfare of its people. He was the first chief officer of the Smethport fire department and is still one of its most active members.

Mr. Gorton was born at Belmont, Allegany county, N. Y., in the year 1849; he was named after his father who died shortly before young Gorton was born. His early life was uneventful. His youth being passed on the farm where the daily round of labor was only interrupted by attending the district school during the winter months. At the age of sixteen he started out for himself, working in the lumber woods, in saw mills or whatever work he could turn his hand to, putting in every spare moment at study, until, at the age of nineteen, he commenced teaching, which occupation he followed for three years in the State of New York and one year in Michigan.

During the years 1870 and 1871, while engaged in teaching, he devoted all leisure hours to the study of the law; but as the necessities of the times required the acceptance of a position that for four years compelled constant travel through the States and British Provinces, his law studies were unavoidably interrupted, until 1876, when he again took the law at Friendship, N. Y., and was admitted men, the largest beneficiary order in this country. He is also a member of the Odd Fellows, the Knights of the Maccabees and the Knights of St. John and Malta.

The following tribute from the pen of Judge William H. James, of Philadelphia, taken from the Era Herald of October 10, 1893, will show the appreciation the members of the A. O. U. W. have for his services to the order; and will also show that whatever position Mr. Gorton occupies receives his undivided time and attention, and the duties of his office are always performed with ability and credit:

"The tall and lank boy of 15 years measuring six feet, and weighing 110 pounds, developed into a robust man of that height and weighing over 220 pounds, when he appeared in the grand lodge at its session in 1883. His commanding appearance attracted attention, and full of fun with an ample stock of fresh jokes transported from western New York and northern Pennsylvania, he made many friends.

"At the session of 1886, when the great trial of the order over the charter came, he was foremost in the fight and became chairman of the most important committee of that session—the famous committee of fifteen—which had in charge the future destiny of the order in this state, and the measures which he favored were finally carried.

"At the session of 1889, he was elected Grand Guide and has since occupied the different chairs of the Grand Lodge until he was installed as Grand Master Workman in 1891.

"He has proven a most excellent executive officer, and has visited nearly every part of his jurisdiction, stirring up its members, and by systematic work with the other executive officers has instilled new spirit in the whole order in the State, resulting in an increase in membership, such as the jurisdiction of Pennsylvania has not had for years. He is a thorough workman, and devotes his undivided attention to the A. O. U. W., in which society he has an abiding faith and love, and he has been highly complimented from all parts of the jurisdiction for his efficient and successful services."

SHELDON JEWETT,

candidate for County Commissioner, is a farmer who resides in Bradford township, at Custer City, where he was born 43 years ago. He is one of the largest taxpayers in the county, paying taxes on every building in the village, and is a man of marked business abilities. He served in the famous "Bucktail" regiment and was a prisoner at Andersonville for 5 months. He has every qualification for conducting the affairs of this county, and being a Republican who was willing to lay down his life for the principles of Republicanism, he certainly should receive the vote of every man who believes in those principles.

FRANK R. FOSTER.

The other nominee for County Commissioner, is one of the best known men in the county. He was born in Lockport, N. Y., in 1850, and when 15 years of age, went into the oil country, locating first at Pleasantville, and worked on oil wells for ten years, when he entered the drug business, which he has since followed. Eight years ago he located in Smethport, and during that short time, has served that borough three years as Auditor, and also the county the same time in like capacity. He has represented the borough five years of the eight he has lived there, in the Republican convention, which is a sure indication of his popularity, and the extensive acquaintances which he enjoys, makes his election an undoubted fact. Mr. Foster is familiar with the affairs of the county, and is a man of such unquestioned business ability, that his election is sure to be hailed with pleasure by all who believe in having capable men fill the county offices.

RICHARD A. RICE,

another Republican who has the honor of wearing the laurels and scars of the famous "Bucktails," was chosen as one of the candidates for County Auditor. Mr. Rice was born in McKean county, and Eldred township has been his home for 33 years. He served 3 years in the war of the Rebellion, and after being wounded at the battle of Laurel Hill he was honorably discharged. By close attention to duty he won the mark of lieutenant after two years service. He is a man who has always attended strictly to business, and during the pioneer days, when lumbering was the chief industry, employed a large number of men. He was one of the most popular Commissioners this county has had, and has filled many township offices to the credit of himself and profit of the people. His selection for County Auditor was a wise one.

WILLIAM A. YOUNG.

Another staunch Republican, and a fit colleague for the gentleman above mentioned, is William A. Young, also candidate for County Auditor. Mr. Young was born in Keating township in 1855, and has always resided in this county. His occupation has been chiefly that of farming and lumbering but he is at present assisting his brother in the mercantile business at Smethport. He is a man of sound judgment and strict integrity and the terms he served as Supervisor of his township were marked by the carefulness with which he conducted public affairs. The summing up of public accounts, and the making of public statements, is a most important duty, and one which deeply interests the tax-payers, and the naming of such men as Rice and Young by the Convention, was not only a wise conclusion, but one which will [illegible] meet the approval of the people at the polls.

ever committed in this country, as the killing of Mayor Carter H. Harrison at his home in Chicago on Saturday evening last. A crank by the name of Pendergrast, who got it into his head that the mayor should appoint him corporation counsel, called at the mayor's residence about 8 o'clock in the evening and said to the girl who answered the door bell, that he wanted to see Mayor Harrison. The girl replied that the mayor was resting for a few moments, but the mayor, who was in a room adjoining, overheard the conversation and repaired to the hall, when the girl retired. She had only reached the dining room in the rear of the hall when she heard the shot of a revolver, followed by four others in quick succession. She returned to the hall, followed by the coachman, who was near at hand, and by a son of the mayor who was in a room up stairs. They reached there just in time to see the mayor sink to the floor. The coachman started for the murderer, who fired a shot at him before getting on to the street, but without effect. The murderer dashed down the street, the coachman and others following him. After running several blocks he rushed into a police station and gave himself up.

The murdered man was carried into the dining room and laid on a lounge, where he expired in less than twenty minutes from the moment the first shot was fired. One of the saddest features in connection with the murder was, that on the 11th of this month Mayor Harrison was to be married to a Miss Annie Howard, of New Orleans. The lady was stopping at the house of his son in Chicago, having been there on a visit to the World's Fair, for a few days, only a couple blocks from the mayor's residence. The only words uttered by the mayor after being shot were: "This is death; I feel it. Bring a doctor, bring Annie; bring Annie." But the mayor passed away before Miss Howard reached his side.

The excitement in Chicago was intense, and the murderer would certainly have been lynched had he been caught before reaching the police station. Mayor Harrison was one of the most popular men of Chicago.

THE SOUP HOUSE MOVEMENT.

"It is now admitted by the Philadelphia Record that 50,000 people are in enforced idleness in the single district of Kensington because the textile mills have been closed. Many times fifty thousand are idle in the city and in the State, because of the industrial depression. Relief of the idle workmen of Kensington being imperative, the Record proposes that the "Soup House Movement" be at once begun.

The Soup House Movement! One year ago all these people, and the other idle millions all over the land who now hunger and shiver, were fully employed at the highest wages ever paid to labor since man first stood on the earth. At that time the Record, day after day, instructed the workingman that they had no right to be contented, the employers were pocketing all the profits procured from an infamous tariff, that the workingman would never be happy and prosperous until the Democratic party should come to power and sweep all tariff legislation out of existence. Then, according to the Record, the laborer would indeed have high wages; then he could buy his clothing cheaper, then he could fill his stomach and warm his back and live in such luxury as would never come to him while the tariff ate up his substance for the benefit of the greedy manufacturers. Then ease and joyousness and luxury and contentment would fill the homes of the oppressed and down trodden workingman. This was only twelve months ago, and now "The Soup House Movement" is urged by the Record to stop the hunger pangs of the laborer.

Less than one year ago Colonel M'Clure addressed a meeting in the Academy of Music which was filled to the roof with workingmen. He also held to the envy and the scorn of his audience the robber manufacturers. He, too, showed to his satisfaction how the present tariff law filched from the people their substance for the advantage of the privileged few. He too, knew a short road by which the workman could reach his own, and substitute fatness for the leanness to which the iniquitous M'Kinley law had doomed the unfortunate laborer. The great room rang with applause as the Colonel indicated the showers of blessings which would fall if Mr. Cleveland should be elected. The echoes have hardly stopped vibrating the ear drums of those who heard; and now—"The Soup House Movement," in behalf of some of the Colonel's hearers, has become a necessity.

On the November night when Cleveland's election was declared, and on the following day, the streets of Philadelphia were thronged with workingmen glad to have a brief respite from toil while they proclaimed their exultation that, at last, the yoke of the oppressor was broken, the iron hand of the tariff tyrant lifted. Stuffed with lies by free trade editors and orators, blinded to the truth, completely led astray from the straight road of their own interests, these unhappy people, tramped the streets and shouted and waved their banner and cheered the men who had cheated them, and welcomed the incoming of a new day of prosperity and rejoicing for the horny-handed sons of toil. To-day one of the teachers brings to the exultant multitudes this cold message—"The Soup House Movement" must begin!

And that man in the White House, who began the assault upon the protective tariff system which filled the land with industry and the homes of the workingmen with peace, that man who pretended from the first that he was the true friend and champion of the workingmen against the blundering brigands who own the mills, what reflections come to him as he considers the ruin he has wrought? He can remember the hopes he held out to the workmen of the glorious things which were to come to them if he and his party should gain control of the government. The workingmen remember, too, and as they look for fulfillment of his promises and his hopes, they encounter, within six months of his inauguration, amid the wreck of American industry, the declaration from one of Mr. Cleveland's assiduous worshipers that "The Soup House Movement" must begin!

Will the workmen of this country learn the lessons now, or must it be taught by still fiercer suffering?—The Manufacturer. (Phila.)

which there are surprises both in the size and enthusiasm of the meeting. Fully 6,500 persons gathered in a grove just outside the town to hear the Governor. It was an enthusiastic and wholly sympathetic assemblage. The Governor said in part: "Mr. Neal asks in one of his speeches why it is if the tariff is not a tax, as I said in my speech in Niles two years ago, that we, by taking off the tariff on sugar, saved the American people $55,000,000 a year. Well, I did say that, and helped to do it. You people have realized it in cheaper sugar. My distinguished competitor does not discriminate between a revenue and a protective tariff. A sugar tariff is a revenue tariff. It was a Democratic one and that was evidenced by the fact that when I moved in the House to do away with the tariff on sugar every Democrat voted against it. A revenue tariff is always paid by the consumer. A revenue tariff is a tariff put on a foreign product that had no production in the United States. Then the consumer pays it. When you put tariff on things such as are made at home for our own consumption it protects the American workingman from foreign made goods, and competition among ourselves fixes the price to the American consumer, and there has not been a thing made at home that has not been cheapened by competition under this tariff. Everything has cheapened but men." After speaking at Cadiz the Governor visited Dennison, where there was to have been an open air meeting. The hall holds only about 1,400 persons, and an hour before the meeting, it was jammed and 3,000 people were on the outside; therefore an overflow meeting was held which the Governor addressed before going inside.

THE bill repealing the purchasing clause of the Sherman law of 1890 passed the Senate finally on Monday last, by a vote of 43 yeas to 32 nays, Mr. Cameron, of this State, voting with the minority. The struggle has been a long and at times a very bitter one but that the result is for the best interests of the country we firmly believe. That it will revive the manufacturing interests to any great extent we do not believe. That Mr. Cameron voted in direct opposition to the wishes of a very large majority of his constituents there can be no question.

DURING the late silver struggle in the United States Senate, Senator John Sherman went home and to bed, and declined to engage in the continuous session business. He is quoted by a Washington correspondent as assigning this reason: "The people of Ohio elected me Senator to represent them and their State in legislation on this floor. If they had desired one for physical endurance they would have chosen a young and cheaper man."

A WEALTHY tobacco planter from North Carolina, by the name of Maroney, was on his way to Chicago the other day, and while at a station lunch counter in Cincinnati objected to the presence of William Dawson, a colored porter, and undertook to eject him. Both were badly bruised in the fight which followed. Maroney lost a [illegible] diamond ring and was fined [illegible] and costs. Served him just right.

IF we want our goods made abroad and not at home, we should be for a revenue tariff. If we want them made at home, we should be for a protective tariff. If we make them at home, we will employ American labor. If they are made abroad, foreign labor will make them and home labor will be idle. It is no economy to buy foreign goods and leave our own unsold.—McKinley.

SENATORS Allen, of Nebraska, and Martin, of Kansas, who are two of the most active opponents of the silver law repeal, were elected last year by a combination of Democrats and Populists arranged by the Democratic National Committee and approved by Mr. Cleveland. Then why is not the President largely responsible for the trouble he has had since calling Congress together.

goods are new compared with new—not new compared with old.

We don't urge our lower prices, because low prices are sometimes heavy on the side of folly. We say "pay more," if need be, in order to "get the best." But the best needn't be the costliest, although it means quality that can be guaranteed.

That's introduction enough to our cloak stock. We don't intend that any garments in town shall be within hailing distance of ours this season. Tailor-made jackets in generous assortments, join hands with stylish capes and long cloaks in commanding your attention. Remember we manufacture for ourselves. That has a great deal to do with low prices.

The stock represents thousands of stylish garments the most popular of lines ranging from $10 to $35. It'll pay you to come to town and see the collection.

WARM FURS;

You can save money in buying furs if you want to. Nothing easier. Buy them where they don't have to make the expense of doing the whole business come out of fur-selling alone. Wonderful what a saving there is in doing several parts of business as a whole.

There's style and comfort in our fur and seal garments. No question about the goodness of any. It's a complete stock, and should win every buyer's careful money.

Every kind of fur cape at every price that's reasonable. And seal skins that that are genuine Alaska, London dyed.

It means something to sell such things at dry goods profits. We're willing you should judge the entire store by the values in fine Furs.

It is expected that our beautiful new school house will be ready for occupancy by December 1st.

Those who fail to hear Knoll & McNeil at the opera house Saturday evening will certainly regret it.

It is said that a Keating township Democrat recently killed his dog because it was following a Republican.

Judge Hamlin has put into the bank a handsome burglar proof safe for the keeping of valuable papers and reserved funds.

On our second page will be found sketches of the men who should receive the vote of every Republican in McKean county.

When Tennyson wrote "The Charge of the Light Brigade" he must had in mind the rates of the Smethport Gas Company.

The Republican candidates are all handsome men. We give the portraits of some of them this week, simply as types of the whole.

Come to the Epworth Chapel next Tuesday, Nov. 7th, the ladies of the M. E. Church will serve oysters. Supper from 6 to 10 o'clock.

V. Klappenbach has fitted up a handsome store in the Abbey building, below the Chautauqua House. He is doing a nice business in merchant tailoring.

If Gov. Pattison had known that the 14th of December came during our court week, it is very likely he would have fixed another date for the hanging of Crossmire.

It is stated that a pail of water containing a handful of hay placed in a room where there has been smoking will absorb all the odor of the tobacco.—Indianapolis News.

The Supreme Court of Michigan has decided that the woman's suffrage law passed by the last Legislature is unconstitutional and that women cannot vote at municipal elections.

Cyrus E. Barrett offers his residence in the western end of Smethport for sale. Mr. Barrett wants to live nearer his business and this very desirable property can be purchased at a bargain.

The report circulated through this section to the effect that Dr. J. P. Bourne was "touched" for $300 and his gold watch by Chicago crooks on his recent visit to the World's Fair, is without foundation. The doctor's leg was not pulled.—Ceres Mail.

—The attention of the readers of the MINER is called to the new advertisement of D. C. Young. Fall and winter goods of the most desirable styles and quality are now being received at Mr. Young's big store. He also has a large stock of boots and shoes, groceries, &c.

While visiting with her grandparents at Eldred the first of the week, a daughter of Mrs. May Bush, of East Smethport fell from a chair and badly fractured her arm. Mrs. Bush is in Eldred taking care of her and reports the little sufferer as doing as well as could be expected.

A small but appreciative audience attended the McIntyre concert on Tuesday evening last. Every number on the program was encored, and all were exceptionally well rendered, the violin playing of Mr. Holland being especially fine. It should have been better patronized.

—Ralph Crossmire is the 13th person Attorney Mullin has defended on a charge of murder, and Ralph's case is the first one which resulted in a first degree verdict. The unlucky 13 is a hoodoo.—Era. This is a remarkable record for any attorney to make and is conclusive evidence of the great ability of that gentleman as a criminal lawyer.

—The Governor has fixed the date for the execution of Ralph Crossmire on Thursday, Dec. 14th. The Court of Quarter Sessions and Oyer and Terminer will be in session that week and Geo. Snyder will very likely be on trial for the murder of his wife when Crossmire will be launched into eternity. It will undoubtedly be one of the most exciting sessions of the courts of this county ever held. After Sheriff Grubb received the death warrant, he notified Ralph of the unpleasant duty he had to perform. Ralph replied that he knew it was his duty and that he must perform it.

The many friends of Mrs. Nena Sharp, wife of Dr. Sharp of Lakewood, N. Y., will be pained to learn of her misfortune in breaking her leg while getting off the cars at Jamestown on the morning of Oct. 20th. She had accompanied her mother, Mrs. L. J. Wright of Eldred, this county, to the train, where a pickpocket succeeded in securing Mrs. Wright's purse containing $15. The bold deed was committed at 9 o'clock in the morning while a great many people were at the depot. During the excitement Mrs. Sharp in getting off the train made a misstep and broke her leg. Mrs. Sharp is well known here where she lived for several years.

left two cubs in the woods. He dispensed of his bears in bear steak pretty freely around this town, the editor of this paper receiving a good sized chunk. It was sweet and quite palatable meat and Mr. Outatt will accept our thanks for the same.

—At a meeting of the Eldred Band last Tuesday evening it was voted to retain the services of H. G. Heath as musical director for the coming year, at a salary of $150. Mr. Heath has donated his time to the band ever since he came to Eldred and has always worked the hardest for the organization's success and this is only a fitting tribute to him and we hope to see the band flourish better than ever.—Eagle.

—F. B. Dolley's saw mill and lumber plant known as the Coleman, about a mile above Port Allegany, was destroyed by fire yesterday. The loss is about $15,000, and there is an insurance of $10,000. Ford Bros' saw mill at Gardeau, was burned Tuesday. The loss was about $5,000, with insurance of $3,000. The Ford Bros. were contractors, and were sawing lumber for the H. C. Rich Lumber company, who are also losers by the fire.—Era.

By an act of the last Legislature, approved by Governor Pattison on the 31st day of May, the November election day is made a full legal holiday. Some doubt has been raised upon this point because of the fact that two laws covering this subject were passed and signed by the Governor. The first act was approved on May 23d and provided that the election days in February and November should be half holidays beginning at noon. In the general act, which was approved eight days later the November election day was included among the days set apart as full legal holidays. It is held that this law supersedes the act of May 23rd, and November 7 will this year be observed by the departments and banks as a full holiday. The February election day will be observed as a half holiday.

Among the many girls employed by Frank J. Lytle, of Portland, during the grape harvest, was Mildred Althoff, who was employed as accountant in a manufacturing house at Williamsport, Pa., but who has worked for Mr. Lytle for four seasons during the grape season. Last year she put a note in one of the baskets she picked, telling where she lived, where she then was, etc., and signed her name only, Mildred. The note fell into the hands of George P. Newcomb, a salesman in a New York clothing house, who at that time was near Olean. He visited Williamsport, but was unable to find Miss Althoff, as he didn't know her given name. The 23d of September, this year, Newcomb went to Mr. Lytle's and applied for work which he secured, and he was not long in finding the Mildred of the note. A rapid courtship followed, and recently they were married at Mr. Lytle's, departing the same day for a wedding trip to New York and New Orleans.—Dunkirk Herald.

Kittredge Opera House.

On Saturday evening, Nov. 4th, the well known cornet soloists make their initial appearance before a Smethport audience. The Sun Critic, St. Louis, says of Mr. Knoll:

A. M. Knoll the celebrated cornet virtuoso, is the equal if not the superior, of the great Levy. He handles his instrument with grace and perfect ease. He was recalled time and again and responded to several encores every night. The lovers of music should not miss the opportunity to witness this great player. His execution of "A Night in Venice," one of his own arrangements, and "Annie Laurie," was simply grand. He is as far superior to Liberati as the Arsenal Band is to the coon bands that parade the streets occasionally.

On Tuesday evening, November 7th, comes Miss Genevieve Carpenter in the great comedy drama, "The Country Girl." The Syracuse Courier says:

The Country Girl attracted a large and enthusiastic audience at the Grand Opera House last night. Louise Sanford the heroine lead was played with great effect by Miss Genevieve Carpenter, and she completely won the sympathy of the audience with her. The supporting company was excellent.

CELEBRATED NOTES

THE INCOMPARABLE ARTISTIC LESSON OF THE FAIR.

Before the Summer comes again the beautiful city will fade away like the ... work of an early morning. This ... [illegible] ... with life and ... [illegible] ... the lovely ... [illegible] ... to the ever ... [illegible] ... Every ... [illegible] ... to every American as marking for them and the ... [illegible] ... world ... civilization never before reached by any people, as marking the dawn of a new era in the progress of the Republic, a new light in architecture, in moral decoration and sculpture, in the weaving of exquisite stuffs, in the glazing of porcelains, the making of glass and perfecting of all the lesser arts that serve to beautify our homes and gladden our lives, and in the proving, by comparison with the best work of the other nations of earth, the high standard reached by our own artists, and the fixing forever of that position in the art of the world.—From "The Picturesque Side" by F. Hopkinson Smith, in the November number of Harper's Magazine.

WHITE MEN IN THE INDIAN TERRITORY.

Strange as it may seem there are at least one-third more white United States citizens in the Indian Territory—comprising the five civilized tribes of Cherokees, Creeks, Seminoles, Choctaws, and Chickasaws—than the total population of Oklahoma Territory, including the new opened reservations. It is this remarkable fact which made the last Congress so prolific of bills affecting the Indian Territory, and caused the Senate to empower the President to appoint a committee of three to visit these five nations, as they call themselves, this past summer, and treat with their respective governments with a view to the dissolution of their tribal relations, the allotment of their lands in severalty, the acceptance of American citizenship, and speedy statehood. The tribal population of these nations aggregate in round numbers 62,000, divided as follows: Cherokees, 23,000; Creeks 14000; Seminoles, 3000; Choctaws, 17000; Chickasaws, 5000. The United States citizens population, owning no tribal allegiance and alien in character is conservatively estimated at 150,000, of which number 75,000 are in the Chickasaw nation alone. When it is considered that there are fifteen non-citizens to one citizen in the last mentioned nation, the reader will readily perceive the condition which calls for Congressional action and threatens the abrogation of Indian autonomy. Fully four-fifths of this alien white population immigrated to the Indian Territory after the opening of Oklahoma for settlement.—From "An Indian Commonwealth," by Rezin W. McAdam, in Harper's Magazine for November.

A single trial of Dr. Henry Baxter's Mandrake Bitters will convince any one troubled with costiveness, torpid liver or any kindred diseases of their curative properties. They only cost 25 cents per bottle. For sale by H C Wells.

Mrs Livermore.

A rare treat is in store for the people of Bradford. The Political Equality Club of that city has secured the services of Mrs. Mary A. Livermore to deliver a lecture on political rights for women, at the Exchange Lyceum on the evening of Nov. 14th. Mrs. Livermore is one of the most brilliant lecturers in this country. There is probably no woman in the country who is known and has lived in so many households as this lady, and anyone who has ever heard her on the lecture platform will want to hear her again.

Sailed the Seas 28 Years.

Capt. A. P. Lord is a prominent resident of Hampden, Me. For 28 years he sailed the seas and upon retiring from that calling, was appointed by the U. S. government to superintend its interests in the Alaska seal fisheries, a position he held five years. In speaking of his experience, he says: "For several years I was greatly troubled with nervousness, and a pain in the region of my heart. It was almost impossible for me to get rest and sleep. Physicians from New York to San Francisco did me no good, but Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine and New Heart Cure speedily and completely cured me. I owe my present and excellent health to them."

"The best plaster."—Dampen a piece of flannel with Chamberlain's Pain Balm and bind it on over the seat of pain. It is better than any plaster. When the lungs are sore such an application on the chest and another on the back, between the shoulder blades, will often prevent pneumonia. There is nothing so good for a lame back or a pain in the side. A sore throat can nearly always be cured in one night by applying a flannel bandage dampened with Pain Balm. 50 cent bottles for sale by A. B. Armstrong.

Bucklen's Arnica Salve.

The best salve in the world for cuts, bruises, sores, ulcers, salt rheum, fever, corns and skin eruptions, and positively cures piles, or no pay required. It is guaranteed to give perfect satisfaction, or money refunded. Price 25 cents per box. For sale by Frank R. Foster, Druggist.

Mr. Moore, the postmaster at Bradshaw, Va., after reading an advertisement of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy, concluded to try a small bottle of it. He says: "I used it in two cases for colic and three for diarrhoea with perfect satisfaction. I have handled and used a great deal of patent medicine but never tried any that gave as good results as this." For sale by A. B. Armstrong.

$25,000 in Premiums.

Offered by Liggett & Myers Tobacco Co. of St. Louis, Mo. The one guessing nearest the number of people who will attend the World's Fair gets $5,000.00, the second $1,000.00, etc. The Star tobacco tags entitle you to a guess. Ask your dealer for particulars or send for circular.

Mr. W. M. Terry, who has been in the drug business at Elkton, Ky., for the past twelve years, says: "Chamberlain's Cough Remedy gives better satisfaction than any other cough medicine I have ever sold." There is good reason for this. No other will cure a cold so quickly; no other affords so much relief in cases of whooping cough. For sale by A. B. Armstrong.

Millinery.

Mrs. G. A. Stickles is now settled near the Racket Store in East Smethport, where she has a nice variety of ladies, misses and children city trimmed hats, caps and bonnets, also ribbons, laces, fancy feathers and other millinery, too numerous to mention. Give her a call.

H. C. Bartle, who has been a citizen of this borough a number of years, received a notice from the Pension Department at Washington last week, saying that his pension had been suspended. Those that were acquainted with Mr. Bartle on the battle field, say he was a faithful soldier, and that when duty called him, he never faltered. He fought all through the battle of Gettysburg, and was honorably discharged at the close of the war. While in the service he contracted a disease from which he never recovered, and from which he never will, and the small pittance which was given him a short time ago by the government, to show its gratitude for his service, while upon the field of battle and carnage, has been taken from him, without a chance to defend his case. The only defence that should be necessary in such a case, should be the proof that he went and fought for the stars and stripes. If war should be declared in this country to-morrow, under the present administration, how many men would leave their home and places of business and offer up their lives for such an ungrateful country.

We learn by the Bradford papers that another Eldred boy has gone wrong. This time it is one Straight, who last summer ran a meat market here. His wife left him and he got Emma McGraw from Bradford, to come over and keep house for him. Later they removed to Bradford, and last week Wm. ... at the ... GEO. A. BACKUS.

A Hunter's Effort to Secure a Brace of Ducks Costs Him His Life.

Charles A. Lindberg, 40 years old, foreman of James J. Hill's farm near White Bear, met with a terrible death yesterday afternoon. About 2 o'clock he left home, telling his wife he was going to Mud lake on the western boundary of the farm to shoot ducks.

Two hours later one of the farmhands, passing along the edge of the lake, heard the faint halloo of some one out on the water. Peering across the lake he saw near the middle of the sheet of water an overturned boat and could dimly discern the outlines of a human being struggling in the water. There was no boat near in which the farmhand could go to the assistance of the drowning man and he hurried off to Mr. Hill's residence and spread the alarm among the other employees. When finally a boat was secured and rowed to the spot where the overturned hunting boat floated on the surface of the water nothing could be seen of its former occupant.

The boat was recognized as the one Lindberg was accustomed to use and search was made for the hunter's body. It was found within three feet of where the boat had been capsized, in about four feet of water. The bottom of the lake is an oozy mass of mud and treacherous quicksand out of which shoot thousands of water lily stems. Evidently Lindberg had shot a couple of ducks—the dead birds were floating near by on the water—and in attempting to pick them up had capsized the frail boat. His feet became tangled in the web of water lily vines, and he could not extricate himself from the quicksand into which he sank inch by inch until he was drawn under the water and drowned. The body was nearly buried in the mud when the searchers recovered it.—St. Paul Pioneer Press.

THE PARLIAMENT OF RELIGION

Some of the Things It Accomplished of Especial Interest to Christians.

Now that the parliament of religion in Chicago has ended it is pertinent to ask what it has accomplished. The inquiry is a difficult one to answer, for no tangible results were to be looked for from such a gathering. It recorded no vote on any of the questions discussed and to all outward seeming it left things just as they were before. Nevertheless the [illegible] and [illegible] people of the country who have read of its doings have formed some sort of opinion as to the points at issue. And that opinion [illegible] what [illegible]

W[illegible] Christians have [illegible] to recognize more clearly than before the fact that there are [illegible] than Christianity. It makes no difference whether these other religions are regarded as wholly or only partly false. In either case they are still religions, by means of which hundreds of millions of people find [illegible] hope [illegible] life and [illegible]

We may go even further and say that the parliament [illegible] the other world religions [illegible] Christianity [illegible]

The western Christians have thus gained a truer [illegible] a larger charity [illegible] their own religion.—New York Tribune.
